Mason Smith:

Under the Hat and Behind the Mic

By Claire Levine

When you go to an Eastside Bluegrass concert, you'll see projected on a screen behind the stage a photo of three youngsters playing stringed instruments. It looks like they are in some dark hollow.

In fact, that's where they were. Mason Smith's father and two aunts were photographed standing near their family home in Pineville, Kentucky.

Although Mason got hooked on playing and singing bluegrass as an adult, he carries with him a life-long love of traditional and gospel music. It plays out in a selfless sharing of time and energy -- and sometimes cash -- to keep the music in the public eye.

Mason organizes the annual Sonny Hammond OBA Gospel Show, as well as the Eastside Bluegrass series that runs nine months of the year. He hires the bands, sets up the room, coordinates with the venue and the sound technician, emcees -- and usually performs a welcoming song for Eastside audiences.

You've probably seen Mason emcee at a festival in the Northwest. Here are some things you may not know about him.

On the way to the old home

Mason comes by his love of bluegrass honestly.

His parents moved to Oregon so his dad could find good work -- outside of the coal mines.

When Mason visited the family's Kentucky homestead in 1959, his grandfather was plowing his field with a horse -- and returning to a home with no indoor plumbing.

But when his father left Kentucky, he left the music behind, as well. Mason said, "I don't remember ever seeing him play that guitar" that's in the picture shown monthly on stage. When Mason's dad moved to Portland -- the home town of his wife -- he stopped performing, because he couldn't find anyone who played country gospel music.

Mason played trumpet and drums as a kid, "and I took six guitar lessons, but then jobs, cars and girls -- well, one in particular -- got in the way." Mason married Joyce, his high school sweetheart, in 1968 before shipping off to Vietnam in the service.

Mason and Joyce "sang all the time" together, but Mason was too self-conscious ever to sing in public. Joyce passed away in 1984, before Mason found his public voice as both a singer and an emcee.

President's Message

Happy New Year, bluegrassers! We truly hope your holidays with friends and family were wonderful and relaxing.

Our year was a productive and successful one. We've nearly finished fine tuning our new website and are excited for its launch this winter. We raised a good amount of money for our Chick's Kids fund that will help bluegrass instruction continue and keep instruments in the hands of youth. So much thanks to Stacey Harnew and the Chick's Kids team that continue to foster Oregon bluegrass and keep Chick Rose's legend alive. We also have more funds than we've had in many, many years and are excited about structuring some new, strong goals for our organization and setting them in motion.

We only ask a few things from you this year, dear members - mostly just your presence and enjoyment at some key events. First, find us at our Annual OBA Sonny Hammond Gospel Show on January 25th (see our ad on page 8). Second, make sure you Wintergrassers find our OBA Hospitality Suite at Wintergrass in Tacoma, February 27th - March 2nd. There'll be non-stop jamming, band showcases and beer (see the ad on page 10). Third, bring yourself and friends to our free Annual Meeting on April 6th, for food, jamming and a brief meeting including the announcement of new directors and even more jamming. We'll be at a new location to be determined, but we'll keep you posted! And finally, we're brewing up a bigger, better OBA Picker's Fest this year. So, keep your eyes and ears peeled for details to come on that newfangled website that is almost at your fingertips!

We cannot thank you enough for all of your support this last year and the 31 years prior! Without your time, support, consideration and instrumentation, Oregon Bluegrass and our association couldn't have lived long or continue to prosper!

*Cheers to
best year
yet!*

Mason Smith: Under the Hat and Behind the Mic

It all started with a gospel show

Mason always loved bluegrass and classic country, but he never found his way to participate in the music. That changed in 1998, when he saw an ad for the OBA's annual Gospel Show. He bought a ticket, loved it, and returned the second year. And the light bulb went on.

"I had no idea how much bluegrass was going on in the Northwest."

Within two years, he had a mandolin and was tracking down Chick Rose to be his teacher. "I figured if he could teach kids, he could teach this old guy."

Chick, who never let talent go undiscovered, immediately asked Mason if he sang. Mason responded, "In my truck and in the shower." But when Chick convinced Mason to try a song, Chick's response was, "You sure can sing!" And Mason says no one's been able to shut him up since.

The showman

Mason soon found himself on the OBA board. No one on the board had much experience in producing shows, so when there were no takers for producing the annual Gospel Show, Mason stepped up. And, he said, "The first two years were disasters." The shows lost money.

But Mason kept at it, and the show has grown in popularity. It also has regained its role as one of the OBA's principal fundraisers.

During the years when Mason was getting involved with bluegrass, Sharon Sandgren -- another bluegrass entrepreneur -- was hosting a monthly music series at the Gresham Little Theater. After several years, the venue was no longer available, and Sharon had to stop the series.

Around that time, someone at Mason's church asked if he could produce a fundraising show to help the church pay rent in its current building. Mason did one better. He arranged to pay the church a monthly rental fee for use of the room one night a month. Then he set about organizing a concert series taking the place of Sharon's on the third Saturday of each month from September to May.

"Exactly 17 people were at the first show," Mason said. Although he had given the bands a guarantee, neither band would take any money, seeing the low turnout.

Mason said people have been very generous, not the least of whom is Mark Gensman of Ground Zero Sound. Mark insisted on providing the sound for the Eastside series, whether or not Mason could pay him. Today he accepts a small stipend, a fraction of his normal rate, to do a great deal of work: setting up three separate, and usually very different, ensembles for each show, making sure they sound good, and then taking it all down. The shows start at 7 and often run nearly three hours.

It's taking off

In its fifth year, the Eastside Bluegrass series has taken on a life of its own. Mason gets requests from bands all over the Northwest. Even though the pay is minimal, bands love playing the room and the opportunity to perform for a great audience.

Mason Smith: Under the Hat and Behind the Mic

He also has started booking national acts, like Little Roy and Lizzie, and Frank Solivan and Dirty Kitchen. While his shows attract audiences from many parts of the bluegrass community, the core of those in attendance are Eastsiders, many of whom attended the Gresham Little Theater concerts.

The concerts get steady attendance -- but not enough to raise the budget. His primary goal? "I'd love to see the bands get better compensation."

And there's more than being a promoter

Bluegrass means a lot to Mason -- but nothing means more to him than family. It's apparent by looking at Mason's face when he's on stage with his favorite musical partner -- 10-year-old granddaughter Ayana.

Ayana and her mom lived with Mason and his wife Linda for most of Ayana's first eight years. Mason always had it in mind to get the little girl involved formally with music, but he never found something that she really loved.

"But one day when she was seven years old, I heard her singing. And I knew that's what she was supposed to do -- and we got her some training immediately."

Mason arranged for Ayana to start fiddle lessons with Chick -- but after three lessons, Chick went into the hospital -- and never came out. "Her first public performance was at Chick's memorial."

Ayana and her grandpa are now popular performers at open mics across the Northwest. She's a solid fiddler -- currently studying with Martin Stevens, one of the original Chick's Kids -- and has a powerful voice, perfect for gospel melodies.

Mason, too, has come into his own as a singer. Bands often invite him to the stage to sing one of his signature songs, which he powers out with enthusiasm and sincerity.

But for all his confidence singing and emceeing, he admits to serious stage jitters around the mandolin. "The worst musical experience of my life is any time I have to take an instrumental break." (But most of the time, he nails it!)

One of the most exhilarating -- and awful -- moments of Mason's music career came when he was asked to sing a verse of "Will the Circle be Unbroken," on a stage finale featuring Rhonda Vincent at the River City Music Festival.

Mason and others were on stage with Rhonda's band. Emcee George McKnight had planned to sing a verse, but was losing his voice, so he asked Mason to take over.

"I stepped up to the microphone, and all of a sudden, all the music went away!" The band members were all wearing headsets, so there were no monitors on stage. The music was audible where Mason had been standing, but he walked into a sound vacuum just as he was supposed to start singing -- and he had no idea where to begin.

Fortunately, Rhonda recognized what was happening, and began humming so he could hear it. Mason was able to pick up from there, and the performance went off smoothly.

Still, Mason remembers it with a thrill of pleasure and a resurgence of panic. "It was my big chance -- I couldn't hear a thing. It was heart stopping."

The front man

Mason's outgoing personality, his genuine nature and his love of bluegrass have made him a sought-after emcee at regional festivals, including Clatskanie, Bluegrass under the Stars in Goldendale and the Wheeler County Bluegrass Festival.

His enthusiasm keeps him singing and picking, as does his great love of performing with his granddaughter.

And his values keep him producing the Eastside Bluegrass series, which not only helps his church, but is a much-needed venue for Northwest musicians who want to perform in front of an audience that is there to listen.

It's fitting that the OBA Gospel Show brought Mason into the bluegrass fold. We're all lucky that he returns the favor ten-fold every year with his generous contributions of time, charm and money to the bluegrass cause.

A benefit for the Oregon Bluegrass Association

The Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show

By Chris Palmer

Sonny Hammond toasting the inaugural Gospel Show in 1982

On the evening of January 25th, the OBA presents the Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show for its 32nd year. Produced by Mason Smith, the show takes place at the Freedom Foursquare Church. This year's bands are Vancouver's "Fadin' By 9", Tim and Cindy Crosby, and Seattle's "Brother's Keeper." The event begins at 5:30 with a jam and the gospel show starts at 7:00 pm.

Formed in 2005, "Fadin by 9" is a popular Vancouver-based band that includes Dave Irwin on guitar, banjo player Joe Lapidus, Ben Shafton on bass and fiddle player Seth Moran. You heard them if you attended the Tygh Valley Bluegrass Jamboree, the Oregon State Fair or the High & Dry Bluegrass Festival in Bend, among many other places they played this year.

Coming from the Puget Sound area, "Brother's Keeper" is the real deal when it comes to gospel music. The members include Stephen Burwell, fiddle, Terry Enyeart, mandolin/vocals, Mike Faast, guitar/vocals, Mike Ferrel, bass, and Rick Meade, banjo/dobro/vocals. Whether leading worship in their "Down Home Praise" program, providing special music or performing concerts, Brother's Keeper is dedicated to providing excellent God-centered music.

These well-chosen bands are the latest piece of a long and rich history of the OBA Gospel Show. Steve Waller, an OBA founding member, shared recollections of this event's beginnings. In 1982, the year before the OBA was formed, the concept came together during his annual picking party which included Dave Elliott, Mike Stahlman, Steve Reischman and of course Sonny Hammond.

According to Steve, Sonny's idea was to make it into a fund raiser and a means to celebrate the great gospel tunes in bluegrass. This was during the early years of the OBA when many people donated time and money to get the organization off the ground. This included helping to rent the NW Service Center, the original venue for those early Gospel Shows. The bands donated their time. Steve says, "During those first years, the bands maybe got some gas money but nothing else. We worked on it later to get them a modest fee."

The show was officially christened the Sonny Hammond Gospel Show.

"Sonny was quite a character and one of the most charismatic people I've ever met," says Steve Waller. Placing flyers in every music store was that first show's sole means of advertising, and it was an immediate hit. Sadly, Sonny passed away in 1996 and in his honor the show was renamed the Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show.

Sonny's dream was for it to always be an all-gospel show and its custodians always made sure it was kept that way. Ken Cartwright produced it in Salem for a few years before it returned to Portland with a succession of different producers, always flying under the Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show flag and always an all-gospel show. Mason Smith took over the job of producing it a few years ago. Since Mason already produces a monthly bluegrass series at a church, and since gospel happens to be Mason's favorite form of bluegrass, it is a labor of love for him.

The OBA and the bluegrass community are all grateful to Mason for the loving care that he has given it. Coming to the show is another way of supporting the Oregon Bluegrass Association, enjoying some good live gospel music and reconnecting with the friends that you may only see at the summer festivals.

Pat Connell has been successful at many things.

He's done well at whatever career he tried: from managing catering at a resort, to a career in information technology, and in his current profession, selling real estate. He's played bluegrass and acoustic music in well-loved bands since he landed in Bend, Oregon, 40 years ago. He makes friends easily – and keeps them forever.

But nothing lights him up like watching his son Patrick performing on stage with him in the band Whistlin' Rufus. "He's a wonderful player, and such a wonderful person to boot."

To hear Pat talk, his musical life has been a series of lucky coincidences. But anyone who has worked with Pat knows that his "luck" stems from determination, discipline and talent.

Whistlin' Rufus, named after a fiddle tune, is a lively ensemble that excels at entertainment, as well as musicality. Solidly in the "hardly strictly bluegrass" camp, the most notable thing the musicians have in common is a love of what's different in acoustic music.

Pat in the Wild West

It was 1973. Pat arrived in Bend, fresh out of college, driving a 1963 VW Beetle he rebuilt, stuffed with a guitar, a banjo, a funky stereo and his record collection.

(Those of you born past 1980, look up "vinyl records" on Wikipedia.)

What was supposed to be a brief stop on the way to figuring out his life lasted 11 years. During that time, he founded the Buffalo Chip Review bluegrass band with buddy Gary Bowne and performed in many other ensembles. His music overlapped with many who went on to become professionals in the business, including Marv and Rindy Ross, who later made the national charts as Quarterflash.

Pat was playing guitar, but he knew two songs on the banjo. His personal best in earning money as a bluegrass player came from a slightly sloshed father-of-the-bride, who would slip Pat 20 bucks every time he played Foggy Mountain Special.

Fast forward to 2001

During the Central Oregon years, Pat had met and married Carole. They moved to the Willamette Valley, where Carole pursued her career in land use planning and Pat spent a career in the IT field with Siemens AG. During the working-and-raising-kids years (Patrick and younger brother Austin), Pat allowed his music to simmer quietly on the backburner. (However, Pat admits that he got pretty good at putting baby words to fiddle tunes.) During that time, he also coached Little League and Babe Ruth baseball and taught his boys to play and love music.

In 2001, Pat was playing mandolin at a party when he met the late mandolin maker and player, Bob Schneider. Bob invited Pat to a jam in Ladd's Addition of Southeast Portland, where Pat met many active bluegrass pickers. As happens in music circles, Pat met a picker who met a picker who introduced him to Ritchie Wernick. Pat and Ritchie became best friends and music mates.

The two formed Whistlin' Rufus in 2003 with Natasha O'Neal – and have been playing together ever since. Since then, they have added talented and fun people who bring their unique takes on acoustic music to the blend. Whistlin' Rufus is made up of friends, friends of friends, and musicians who wandered in to hear them and never left.

The current configuration is Pat on mandolin and guitar; Ritchie on guitar and harmonica; Patrick on guitar and bass; Nat O'Neal on fiddle; Zach Banks on cello and Jon Meek on dobro, banjo and bass.

Pat Connell and Whistlin' Rufus

As you might expect from a band named Whistlin' Rufus that features two Connells, their music is infused with old time and Irish tunes. They also perform many original songs co-written by Pat and Ritchie, and a trademark song is their version of Ob-La-Di, Ob-La-Da – the best of Liverpoolian bluegrass. It's John Hartford meets River Dance meets Fats Domino.

They're everywhere

Whistlin' Rufus's music connects with audiences. That explains why they not only are booked at bluegrass festivals and events each summer, but they also hold their own among the larger, more competitive music market.

For example, they play regularly at McMenemy venues and O'Connor's in Multnomah Village plus special events like the Wooden Boat Festival in Portland, Sand in the City, and weddings and private parties.

Pat really loves the benefit events, particularly those that help kids. He said, "We consider it a particular honor to be selected by the Community Music Center to kick off the Family Friday Concert series for the last five years."

Recently, Whistlin' Rufus got to work with four different young singers through the nonprofit Ethos, which brings music training to kids who might not otherwise be able to afford lessons.

The band backed up these young singers – on the stage of the Aladdin Theater. The kids played all sorts of tunes, from Rodney Crowell to Green Day songs. "I get so much satisfaction watching these kids belt it out," Pat said.

Another highlight is playing for the Doggie Dash, a fundraiser for the Oregon Humane Society. "It's billed as the confluence of 20,000 legs."

More giving back

Pat's also a board member of the OBA and is responsible for selling ads. He's doing a stellar job of bringing in new advertisers and organizing the ad sales. The revenue he obtains for the OBA helps the Express be self-sufficient and keeps money in the bank to support other OBA functions.

What's the best?

Pat's got that whole "Irish way of talking that makes everything interesting" thing going on. So it's a treat to hear him talk about his music and the joy he takes in it.

Here's his description of the very best part of performing. "It's when all the cylinders are hitting; when everybody knows what they're doing and you're doing it all correctly – and the hair on your arms stands up. You are doing the songwriter honor by playing the song very well. That's the best feeling."

Audiences hear that – and get it. It's why Whistlin' Rufus is celebrating its 10th year, why their inaugural CD "It's About Time" in 2009 was featured on the University of North Carolina's "Back Porch Music" program, why a reviewer of their performance at the Florence Folk Festival wrote, "Audience adrenaline popped when high energy Whistlin' Rufus took the stage. . ." and why Tim Dawdy calls them "master entertainers."

Check out their website whistlinrufus.com to find out where they'll be playing, and watch for a CD with all originals coming out early in 2014. Catch Whistlin' Rufus at the Eastside Bluegrass Concert Series on January 18. You can also follow them on Facebook and Twitter.

The Hunter

One fine day late in spring, our family ventured out onto a ridge overlooking the upper Minam River. It was a great day for enjoying sunshine and the view down into the Eagle Cap Wilderness Area, but we were on a mission: mushrooms. We were hunting for morels, and it was one of the first times that my two daughters went out with us. After some time, I found a couple of mushrooms and showed them what to look for.

After that, it didn't take long for the youngest to make her first find. "Guess what I found!" she hollered out from a grove of fir trees. I went over to where she was hunting and sure enough, right there in front of her was a little cluster of fresh morels. What she hadn't seen was about three dozen others all around her and along the path she had taken to her special trove.

Mary's pride in finding her first mushrooms was immediately trumped by her own amazement when I told her to turn around. Right behind her were more mushrooms. Then she looked out and saw that she was surrounded! Once she learned to see them through her first encounter, she could then look out through the woods and see them everywhere.

Way Over Yonder

One of the most commonly heard questions in the world of beginning dobro players is "What do I do with a minor key?" We're plagued by the idea that since we play with a straight bar, and in bluegrass the dobro is tuned to a major chord, minor chords are somehow mysterious and out of reach. An entire song in a minor key? Daunting!

But why should this be? There is no perceived limitation when we play in a major key, though most of the melody notes we want are not located on just one fret, even when playing in a familiar major chord or key. Say you're in a jam and somebody is playing Wildwood Flower in C.

The dobro player will probably not just park the bar at the fifth fret and stay there, rolling endlessly over the same three notes. No, but what will she do? Figure 1 shows a portion of the dobro fretboard with the fifth fret C chord highlighted, and surrounded by all the notes making up the melody.

Notice that to play this simple melody in a major key, the dobro player feels free to dance around, jumping or sliding up or down a few frets to catch the melody notes while keeping in mind that the home base is there at the fifth fret. She is not limited to playing a straight bar position. As a matter of fact, she is forced to move away from the home base in order to stay

In A Minor Key

Well, just like morels on a fine spring day, the notes available when playing in a minor key are everywhere, once you know where to look. Although we can't strum a minor chord across all the strings, playing melodies, rolls and other dobro maneuvers over a minor chord is no different than playing around on the major chords.

Figure 2: Here is a stretch of the dobro fretboard centered around a Dm shape on the sixth and seventh frets. The notes which constitute the Dm chord are hatched, the other notes of the Dm (C) scale are shown, and I've drawn ellipses around all those places where you can play four or more strings with a straight bar position - yeah, just about all of them! Find them in the tablature.

The Theory of Bluegrass: Mushrooms and Minors

by Matt Snook

To demonstrate, let's try Shady Grove in D minor. Figure 2 again shows part of the fretboard, this time centered on the Dm chord found at the seventh fret, but once again surrounded by all the nearby notes of the Dm (C) scale which are used in the melody – just like before! And just like before, the player can move and slide to these other notes and never feel limited to just those few that make up the Dm chord.

But how do we use rolls and arpeggios to get the driving sound of bluegrass dobro? This requires us to play multiple strings at one time, and it might seem that the straight bar limits us. But look again at Figure 2, and notice all those places where notes of the scale line up nicely for us. These are outlined in the figure, and suggest likely locations for a dobro player to roll across the strings and add some movement or play at least parts of a minor chord. We can take advantage of those locations where the various notes line up even though they are not part of our minor chord!

In Figure 3 you'll find a dobro tab for Shady Grove, including several moves which take advantage of nearby scale notes which are not part of the Dm chord, but still sound great and add movement and syncopation to the melody. For instance, in measure four notice the roll across the fifth fret while playing over the Dm chord. What? Playing C when the song is in Dm? Try it, you'll like it.

As your knowledge of the scale pattern increases, you'll find that every minor chord – or any chord for that matter – is surrounded by many tasty notes that you can reach out and grab instead of just being limited to the notes of your minor chord. And whenever those notes line up on one fret, it opens up the possibilities for rolls and partial chords. They're everywhere; pick a few!

PS: All "Theory of Bluegrass" articles will be available on the OBA website. To make things interesting for both beginners and advanced pickers, the Express column will bounce back and forth – going back to cover some basics, then forward to cover some technical detail that hopefully will captivate the advanced player.

Shady Grove of Mushrooms Traditional

The tablature shows the following notes and techniques across the three systems:

- System 1: Measures 1-4. Chords: Dm, C, Dm, Dm. Notes: 7, 7, 7, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 7, 7, 7, 0, 5, 6, 0, 5, 5, 5, 5, 7. Techniques: slurs, slides (s).
- System 2: Measures 5-8. Chords: F, C, Dm, Dm. Notes: 5, 10, 8, 10, 10, 5, 5, 3, 3, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 6, 0, 7, 7, 9, 9. Techniques: slurs, slides (s), arrows pointing to notes 3, 5, 6, 9, 9.
- System 3: Measures 9-12. Chords: Dm, Dm, Dm, Dm. Notes: 9, 10, 10, 12, 12, 10, 10, 10, 10, 10, 10, 10, 10, 12, 10, 12. Techniques: slurs, slides (s), arrows pointing to notes 12, 10, 12.

It's official – we're excited to announce that we've launched a new and improved website at the same good ol' URL: oregonbluegrass.org. After nearly a year of planning, the website has been transformed into a more vibrant and engaging tool that you should find easier to navigate. The same information you use every day will still be on the website, but there are also lots of new features. To list only a few:

- Blog entries you can comment on after registering on the site
- A calendar with too many great features to list them all here
- A "hire a band" page, including images of member bands that shuffle randomly (there goes the advantage of having a band name that starts with the letter "A")

- An interactive member forum where you can trade advice, sell stuff, plan carpools, etc.

While the new site is visually stunning and far more user-friendly (at least we think so), it is still a work in progress, and we know that there are bound to be imperfections or glitches on some of the many pages that have been redesigned or migrated from the old design. Please help us by sharing any bugs you come across and by providing feedback about your experience on the site—good or bad. Please email your thoughts to webmaster@oregonbluegrass.org.

Many thanks to Dave Whipple and Kelly Farrell! Dave is a professional website developer who led the design work with assistance from Kelly, a cooperative education student intern from Portland Community College. The rebuild and redesign were made possible, in part, by an Arts Recognition grant from the Oregon Arts Commission. Now that the site has switched to a Wordpress platform, it will be much easier for anyone with computer skills to help maintain with some basic training. Please let us know if you'd like to get involved!

After much deliberation and discussion, the OBA Board of Directors also recently decided that after 20 years (or more!) it was time to increase membership and advertising fees. The changes include raising the annual individual membership fee from $20 to $25. There is still a small discount for 3-year renewals. Please see the updated advertising rates listed online and in the Bluegrass Express.

Rural Outreach Opportunity!

Help share bluegrass in rural Oregon!

The OBA has a wonderful opportunity to work with ETHOS (<http://ethos.org/>) in the coming year to support its rural outreach program and further the OBA mission to keep bluegrass music alive through the youth of Oregon.

Ethos has representatives in each of the following musically underserved areas: Madras, Metolius, Elkton, Fossil, Condon, Monument and one state-wide roving representative. These folks would LOVE to hear from individuals and bands that would like to help in any way. Doing shows at local schools, teaching or coaching youth in any bluegrass instrument, providing working instruments to use for learning, or anything else you can think of!

Ethos has generously offered to let any individual or group that contributes significantly to this project use their high-end video recording equipment and studio to record a tune.

If you are interested, contact Tony McCormick via banjo@notebene.net for specific contact information for the area representative you wish to work with.

How Sweet it Is

My name is Bob Llewellyn and I've been around the edges of the OBA family for some years now. I know several people in the group, and I love bluegrass. I play banjo in the band Lucky Gap, based in Newport, Oregon.

Last summer, a few weeks before the Columbia Gorge Bluegrass Festival in late July, my first cousin Willi called me from Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to say that he and his wife Kay were planning a visit up here. It worked out for them to meet me in Stevenson, where we could play and camp together. The only hitch was that Willi plays stand-up, ham-bone, dog-house bass and he wouldn't be traveling with one. He also plays banjo-ukulele, but he really shines on bass. Anyway, I said I'd look around and see about borrowing one, but given the logistics of traveling and camping with somebody else's bass, it didn't seem likely. But "On ne sait jamais"-- you just never know.

So, as planned, my friend Linda, another "Dobro Dolly," had arrived a day early and set up her camp, and met her neighbors. When Willi and Kay arrived the next day they located Linda and met her neighbor Mark, (who may qualify as the friendliest guy in the world) and they all hit it off. Mark is a mandolin player but since he is also learning to play bass, he happened to have a spare one on hand (her name is Peaches, and according to Mark, she is missing Willi), next door to the jam, with a warm and safe place for it to spend the night. Problem solved! This led to energetic late-night jamming and meeting many fun people throughout the weekend. Jamming is such a fun way to interact with people you have never met before.

As if that weren't enough, I stopped by the OBA table and picked up their newsletter and looked through it, and there in stunning black and white was my new friend Mark and his cherry, pristine, flawless, shining-like-a-diamond totally restored little trailer friend, Lily. And if that just don't beat all! I tell ya', it just doesn't get any better!

Sound advice: Hints and tips on sounding your best with Mark Gensman, Ground Zero Sound

Hello again, bluegrass fans. Sitting here in the sub-freezing weather, it's hard to imagine how nice it will be when summer comes again and we can all go outside for some great bluegrass music.

I had someone ask me to write a column regarding the recording process and what each step entails. I know a lot of bands rely on CD sales at gigs to help pay the bills and a lot of fans like having a recording of their favorite group so they can "take them home" after the event. Knowing what steps are required to create a high-quality recorded product might be important.

The first step is to rehearse the songs you plan on recording until they are fully memorized. Every chord change, every break, every vocal part including lining up harmony parts. Doing your homework saves time and frustration and helps musicians relax.

With everyone having access to a computer, a mixer, microphones, and other recording equipment, it is tempting to do the recording "in house." It seems easy to set up the microphones in your living room or garage and record the band. There have been some nice recordings done in this manner, although frequently the results are flawed. There are several reasons why recording at home can be a bad idea.

First, the quality of the components makes a difference. A quality "front end" is important: This includes interfaces and mixers. Having a variety of microphones available is helpful. The microphone that sounds great on stage may not be the best for recording.

Having a headphone distribution system makes overdubbing easier. High-quality headphones are not necessary, but those that block out "bleed" (recorded tracks) are best. The other problem with home-recorded music is the environment. Most living rooms, bedrooms, basements, and garages are not designed to make acoustic instruments sound their best. Reflections, reverb, dead zones, standing waves and bass problems are typical difficulties faced in a home environment. A professional studio will have a treated room designed to make instruments and vocals sound their best. That can be expensive.

Another problem is monitoring. Mixing a band using headphones is a bad idea since they give you a false sense of the actual sound. Most typical home recordings have foot taps, pick clicks, plosives (such as the p and b sounds), and other sounds that simply cannot be heard on home stereo speakers or many headphones. True accurate monitors are not cheap and can make a huge difference in the sound quality.

I have heard home recordings that had foot stomps, chair squeaks, pick clicks, mouth noises (tongue and lip noises) and other distracting problems that apparently could not be heard because of the poor quality of home speakers.

After recording comes the mixing process. This is when the instruments and vocals are blended to make a cohesive song. A typical problem is the lack of panning. Everything is in the center so the song sounds like an old monaural recording. There is no sense of space, and instruments don't have their individual places in the mix. Using EQ, pan, and volume changes can make a huge difference in the sound.

The final step is mastering--where the songs are "finished." Overall tone can be adjusted, reverb can be added to the entire mix, the overall volume can be set to commercial levels and the project as a whole is balanced so one song doesn't jump out at listeners while another has them reaching for the volume knob. Having accurate monitoring is a crucial part of the process. The mastering engineer must be able to hear every nuance of each song. A typical national level mastering engineer can make adjustments of a fraction of a decibel and hear the difference in the monitors.

Anyone listening to a commercial bluegrass CD by any of the "biggs" should notice how clear and clean their recordings are. Notice how the volume throughout the CD is constant. And notice how "present" the band sounds when you listen. Most home recordings cannot achieve that quality. Of course, most home recording engineers don't have hundreds of thousands of dollars in rooms, microphones, converters, and monitors, either.

So if you want to record at home, just keep in mind that there are limitations. The upside is that you can save money. The downside is how having a poor-sounding representation of your band does you no good.

If you have any questions about anything involving recording, mastering, audio software, duplicating, mics, speakers or sound reinforcement, please feel free to contact me at:
